The Old Scent Ball.

The form of perfume known as the scent ball was used in England as early as 1300. It was composed of many ingredients, chief of which was ambergris. At that time a nutmeg was used for a like purpose. It was set in silver, decorated with pearls and precious stones and was a rare and highly prized object.

For a Headache.

One of the quickest known ways of dispelling a headache is to give some of the muscles—those of the legs, for instance—a little hard, sharp work to do. The reason is obvious. Muscular exercise flushes the parts engaged in it and so depletes the brain.

A Few Random Remarks on Married Teachers.

Editor Barre Daily Times:—The brain storm that has been circulating in Barre for the past week, in regard to the action of our school commissioners in discharging the married school teachers, seem to be so contagious, that I feel in your issue of this city that even Casey and Sullivan have got the disease in the fourth degree, and it looks as if they were bound to do it up or kick the bucket. While I believe that married women would, and ought to make the best teachers, I also believe that the proper place for a married woman, is in her own little domestic making a happy home for her husband and her children. All married women should do this. Some married women cannot because they only take the place of dolls; the only duties they have to occupy their time is to fondle teddy bears, kittens and poodle dogs.

Under proper conditions, a society of all children could go to school, and all married women could stay at home, and not be obliged to go out working cheap, taking the places of men. But all the good things, and the good times that we dream about, will come only when the common people get wise.

THE SILGALANA MINES.

This Silver-Lead Ore Proposition Is Already a Producer.

In another column of this paper information is conveyed to the reader of the Silgalana Mines, which are located at White Pine, Gunnison county, Colorado. There are five patent silver lead producing claims owned by the Silgalana Mining Company and a part of last year these claims produced over $30,000 worth of silver-lead ore. The company, under the personal direction of Mr. Stewart Miller, the president, is exerting every effort in developing these properties and Mr. Miller predicts that shares in this company within a year will have an intrinsic value of $2 per share and will be paying corresponding dividends to stockholders.

It is rarely that stock of so promising a nature is offered to the public at so low a figure as 25 cents a share and there is every reason for believing that this is one of the best mining stocks that can now be purchased.—Adv.

REWARD OF

Railroad President on Relations of Capital and Labor

POWER OF TRADES UNIONS

With Thorough Organizations They Will Be in a Position to Demand an Equitable Division of the Products of Labor.

President A. B. Stickney of the Chicago Great Western railroad delivered an address recently on "The Reward of Industry—How Produced and Divided."

Mr. Stickney's address was given over in considerable measure to the relations of capital and labor in productive industry and contained not a few truths that organized employing capital has thought proper to ignore or pretend to ignore. After declaring in opening that the doctrine of brotherly love as applied to industrial relations was a dream of the sweet by and by the speaker said in part:

"A single employee entering the lists against a great employer stands on no such level ground, for the evident reason that he must sell quickly or starve, while the employer can do without his services with little or no inconvenience. It is a maxim of trade that the trader who can wait has an advantage of the trader who cannot wait. To overcome this disadvantage, or at least to minimize it, is the legitimate function of labor organizations. In my judgment, the labor unions have been and are of immense advantage to the employee class. And in my judgment, when the labor organizations are as well organized and managed by officers who are as intelligent and as capable as the managers of the employing capital organizations they will be in a position to command a more equitable division of the rewards of industry under the operation of the natural law of distribution than in any other manner.

"Such disciplined labor organizations thus offered would restore the substantial equality in the trade contest between the employers and employees which existed in this country prior to the middle of the last century, when the distribution of the rewards of industry was so equitably made by the natural law of appointment that the great majority of the American people occupied that sane and satisfactory position contemplated by the wise man who prayed, 'O Lord, give me neither poverty nor riches.'"

"But if the natural and unavoidable conditions which surround production and distribution—namely, that no more can be divided than is produced—be called to mind it will be seen that the power of the labor organizations is limited.

"Theoretically the universal organization of employees could demand such a money price for wages as it might arbitrarily fix upon and by refusing to accept less block the wheels of industry until its terms were accepted. It is equally theoretically true that the universal organization of profit makers could fix such wages as it might see fit and block the wheels until the wage earners accepted their terms.

"If such a deadlock should occur between universal wage earners and universal profit makers, nature would punish the crimes of refusing to trade by various deprivations, the ultimate penalty being starvation for both.

"On the other hand, in the long run it would not materially change existing wages if either party acceded to the terms of the other, because business would readjust itself on the basis of higher or lower nominal values. If the money price of wages were higher, the money price of products would be higher, and if the money price of wages were lower the money price of products would be lower, and consequently the real wages, which are always paid in products, would be substantially the same.

"The often repeated assertion is probably justified that the history of lockouts and strikes does not record a single instance wherein the direct gain to either party has been equal to the direct loss to either party. While recognizing the truth of the assertion, there have been cases of pigheadedness on the part of such negotiations which have simply justified them. Conflicts between employers and employees are not peculiar to modern times. They are as old as the relation known in the law as the relation of master and servant.

"The pages of history are full of records of labor strikes which have been simply justified by the indirect benefits they have conferred upon all the generations which have followed them. "For myself, I believe in strikes when they are justified by the facts upon which they are based, and I believe in using all the force which is necessary to make such strikes effective, but I also believe that the right to strike is like the right of revolution—only justifiable as a last resort where important rights are at stake and after all other means have been exhausted. "In conclusion let me say that my judgment throws to the winds all the theories of equitable distribution by brotherly love or by legislation. I believe that in economic affairs the only way to get a fair share is to be always prepared to fight and when necessary to fight for it."

Carrier Pigeons.
A carrier pigeon was in use by the state department of the Ottoman empire as early as the fourteenth century. Lithgow says that a dispatch has been carried in those days from Bagdad to Aleppo, thirty days' journey on horse, in forty-eight hours.

Economy.
The Scot is proverbially careful with money, but if the following be true he is even more careful than we before believed. The other day a wild eyed highlander entered a chemist's shop and asked for "two pennorth o' rough on rats." Awn sick o' this life!" he gasped out. He was informed that it was sold only in sixpenny packages. He looked long and lovingly at his expense and then said, "Then Awn no commit suicide the hoo?"—London Pick-Me-Up.

Cows With Earrings.
In Belgium all cows over three months old are to be seen wearing earrings. Breeders are obliged to keep a record of all the cattle raised by them, and each animal has a registered trade number, which is engraved on the ring fastened to its ear.

Indian Ocean Sharks.
Although the waters of the Indian ocean are filled with voracious sharks, the inhabitants of the numerous islands near Ceylon swim about in the water with impunity, the sharks refusing to molest them, while a stranger would be instantly devoured.
